Instagram continues to add deeper account management tools, and from today you can delete followers manually. This feature has been available to users on private accounts for some time, but is now available to everyone. Historically, the only way users with public profiles can block followers was to block them. This is a harsh approach - just because you don't want someone to follow you doesn't mean they have to be blocked. To remove one of your followers, light up the Instagram app and go to your profile. Tap Followers to see everyone who follows you. There should be three small dots next to the Follow button. Tap it, then tap Delete to prevent the user from following you. Instagram won't even tell them they were deleted. Thank you. IG. This feature is not yet available to everyone, but it started to be introduced today and should soon be available for all accounts. Instagram is an ideal platform for following friends and getting to know new ones, but it's also fun to see who keeps up to date with all your latest posts. So, if you're curious if someone is following you on Instagram, you can be sure you're not alone. There are a few ways to find out exactly who is down to see your selfie and throw back the Thursday photos when they open Instagram first thing in the morning. It's always been possible to check out and see if someone is following you on Instagram. As soon as a person starts following you, you'll get a notification - you'll find it if you click on the small heart icon at the bottom of the page. But if that person started following you weeks or even months ago, the process requires a little more finagling if you don't know the right tricks. First, you head to your profile to find your list of followers. Then you browse hundreds (or maybe thousands, you popular guy) of user IDs in search of a specific person. Depending on how many follow you, this can be a huge undertaking, and you always risk missing their name Lists. The option is even worse: You should log through their list of followers to see if your username made the cut. Basically, both options are less than ideal. Luckily, there's an easier way to see who's following you or who's been following you on Instagram - here's what you need to do. First, go to your profile page To access your profile, click the small person icon in the lower-right corner of the screen. If you have a person's username, you should be able to check if they follow you directly from your profile page. However, please note that this only works if you are using a mobile app, not a desktop. Tap Followers At the top of your profile page, there should be three numbers. One shows how many Instagram posts you have (posts), another shows how many people follow you (followers), and the other shows how many people you follow (follow). Tap the Followers number and it should open in the list of public accounts that follow you. Find the person's username There you should be able to enter the name or username of the person you are checking in the search bar to see if it comes up. If a person doesn't follow you back, they won't see their name. You can also check this by going to another user's profile and finding their next one in the list to see if your name comes up. If you want to go a step further and see which of your followers has followed you on Instagram without visiting each of their profiles, apps like Followers follow for Instagram! and FollowMeter for Instagram keeps tabs. Despite this, if you're just wondering if one person in particular stopped following you, searching for their name in your Followers section can be just as quick.
